PROJECTS IN THE PIPELINE

This month's Community Group Update highlights four projects that are being envisioned as future UC San Diego projects. In addition to being one of the most prestigious and recognized public universities in the country, UC San Diego is in the process of transformation that is vibrant, collaborative and exciting.

Located in the Warren College Neighborhood, this project is proposed to meet the demand and needs of a growing student population within the Jacobs School of Engineering.

The project is envisioned to include laboratories, classrooms, faculty offices, meeting space, an auditorium, and a café. The building will be designed to foster collaborations between various learning areas.

Design and Innovation Center

Located in close proximity to the future Trolley Station on the west campus, this project is proposed to contribute to UC San Diego's entrepreneurial spirit, specifically, encouraging more collaboration between the Jacobs School of Engineering, the Visual Arts and Cognitive Science Departments, other campus departments, as well as the Office of Innovation and Commercialization and the Alumni Association.

The project is envisioned to include multipurpose building space that
